WOULD BE KEEPER OF RIFLE RANGE

Captain Cuthrell, of Portsmouth, Candidate for New Position.

Captain James Cuthrell, of Portsmouth, is one of several applicants for the place of keeper of the new State rifle range and encampment ground, soon to be built on Virginia Beach for use of the State militia. He has the endorsement of some of the most prominent officers in the militia, members of the Virginia State rifle team and many private citizens in Norfolk, Portsmouth and throughout the State.

Friends of Captain Cuthrell say he is the best fitted man in the State for the place, having specialized in the work for a number of years. Captain Cuthrell is employed in the ordnance department of the United States navy yard, where daily he is brought in close contact with work calculated to fit him for the place at Virginia Beach. He was one of a detachment of Virginia State militia sent to Morehead City the past summer to take part in target practice, and later went to Camp Perry, Ohio, as a member of the Virginia rifle team.

The man in charge of the new range must be familiar with mechanical details. To a certain extent he must know something of electrical apparatus, to keep the telephone system and other appliances in order, and must be able to locate trouble in the water supply and make necessary repairs.

Friends of Captain Cuthrell are anxious that he be named as keeper and are doing all they can to have him appointed by the State Military Board.

DOUGLAS RICHARDSON ILL

Had Health May Cause Withdrawal of His Candidacy.

Former Alderman E. Douglas Richardson is reported as being seriously ill at his home, 506 North Thirty-third Street. Mr. Richardson is a son of Mayor D. C. Richardson, and is well known in city politics. He has been for some time a candidate for the position of superintendent of the municipal electric plant, and in fact resigned from the Board of Aldermen last December in order that a year might elapse, as required by the charter, before he could be re-elected. He is the only candidate in the field for the permanent position of superintendent.

DO-NO-THING SESSION LIVES UP TO ITS NAME

Virginia League Magnates Fail to Elect Presiding Officer for Organization.

DANVILLE NOT REPRESENTED

War of Words, Sometimes Acrimonious, Marks Meeting. Meet Again November 6.

BY GUS MALBERT.
Petersburg, Va., September 18.—The "do-nothing" session of the Virginia League was held here to-day, beginning at 12 o'clock, and adjourning at 2 o'clock, having accomplished nothing, not even the usual justification which generally marks the fall meeting. There were near-fights, many remarks which closely bordered on the acrimonious, and special features, supposedly sacred to the inner circles, but which, through the closely hidden methods of the tribe, at once became public property. And Petersburg was formally awarded the pennant for the season of 1911.

The storm which has been brewing, for these many months, broke, Clump Clark, when it came to the election of officers, and the meeting was a war of words, sometimes acrimonious, marks meeting. Meet Again November 6.

After engaging in a few preliminary questions, W. Gordon McCabe, the genial, albeit formal representative of the Cockeye City Baseball Corporation, arose and delivered himself of the opinion that the meeting to-day was perfectly qualified to enter into the election of a president of the league, either for a term of years, or for just one more year.

Something of the sort had been anticipated, and W. B. Bradley, owner of the Richmond baseball team, strengthened by the opinion of Special Attorney H. H. Sands, avowed, averred and declared that it would be wholly unfitting at this time to name a chief executive. It was in the opinion of the Richmond magnate, an unheard-of and totally unexpected and undesired precedent and entirely disconcerting to the league, and the Virginia League, one of its pillars, in fact, and not represented at the meeting.

Danville Is Missing.
Every other club was represented. Lynchburg, by Bruce Wilkerson; Roanoke, by Elmore Heins; Norfolk, by Woodward Allen; Richmond, by W. B. Bradley and Advisory Counsel W. H. Sands; and Petersburg, by W. G. McCabe and H. B. Pritchard, while Denny Perkins, another Cockeye enthusiast, was around at intervals to lend his helping hand. But when the roll was called, as before stated, Danville was missing. Then the fun began.

Elmore Heins held a telegram from Danville, stating that he could vote the proxy of the club. Somehow or other Bradley got wind of that message, and he was not slow to take advantage of it. Heins called Danville over the telephone. Then Danville called Heins, and finally came calling the other. This happened downstairs in the telephone booth at the Stratford hotel, in room 15 of which the meeting was going on.

While Heins was having his troubles with the telephone girl, upstairs another little bit of excitement was going on. Bradley had become heated in his remarks. Some personalities were indulged in. The result was that Bradley was made a flat offer of $15,000 for his franchise, in stock and barrel. Of course, he did not accept. He has other plans, and instead of talking business he tried to placate the individual making the offer by button-holing him and escorting him to the hall without the conference chamber and indulging in heart to heart talk. Williams had to sit through all this, and the occasion was not at all pleasing to him. In fact, it might be characterized as embarrassing. Here was a man in the position of a receptive candidate for an office which he has not yet held for a year, made to appear as if he were being humiliated. But he kept an even keel, and the storm died.

Other matters of grave importance were lost sight of in the battle for a strategic position on the presidential question, and Bradley has won out for the moment.

At the November meeting it may be different. Rumor at this writing appears to point to the assumption that Bradley hopes to have the Danville franchise transferred to Newport News. Down more close than George Booker, who is the head shoulders, feet, hands and all of baseball on the Peninsula. Should Bradley effect his plans, then the league will be evenly divided, Petersburg, Norfolk and Roanoke standing for Williams, with Lynchburg, Newport News and Richmond "agin" him, just as predicted in these columns many months ago.

Gather not that it was stated out in meeting that opposition to Williams would arise at the November meeting. Nay, nay, such was not the case. There were no overt remarks which might lead to this conclusion. To the contrary, Bradley stated at regular intervals that he might—got the might—vote for Williams, but left the very natural conclusion that he might also be opposed to that gentleman.

Matter Is Deferred.
Though it was pointed out by Messrs. Heins and McCabe in eloquent language that the election of a president at this time would add to the efficiency of that official, it was not to be. The election of a successor to the incumbent was to be deferred until the next meeting, which should not be burdened with any of the policies of his predecessor; that the selection of a capable corps of umpires would be more probable if the man who was to gather the indicator hand-lers were given more time in which to do his work; that any official occupying the high office of president of the Virginia League should know at least ninety days before the expiration of his term whether or not his services would be required for another year or term of years—none of these things appealed to Messrs. Bradley and Wilkerson, who stood firm in their opinion that the matter should be deferred until some time later, and, strange to say, that opinion prevailed.

It was totally unsatisfactory to those on the outside. The politics of the meeting was so apparent that no question was left as to the determination of some interests in the league to endeavor to get rid of Williams. All of the glowing reports of a successful season for the league were at naught when the financial statement was presented and adopted. It was clearly shown by these figures that the league was not any too secure from a purely financial standpoint, and from a playing standpoint—well, the fans know best as to this.

The secretary's report was not made public. What was learned was learned only from the remarks which were turned loose at random by the magnates themselves. Richmond had fallen off several thousands of dollars in the year's receipts, and the other towns, with the exception of Petersburg, had fallen off proportionately. A deficit of $9,000 being noted in the receipts. It was a bad and trying season, and yet, despite the many obstacles encountered, the storm was weathered, and the league, with the operation of the magnates, is ready for a successful season.

But there must be co-operation. There must be a question about this. If Richmond is desiring to kick the traces, there are purchasers who are ready and willing to take over the Richmond franchise. There is also no question about this. The offer was flatly made and just as flatly refused. For the very good reason that the owner of the Richmond franchise realizes that he has a ready source of revenue from the club.

The storm yesterday was as nothing to that which will break at the November meeting. Then, in addition to the selection of a president—and there seems to be little reason to suppose that Williams will be named for a term of years—several claims will be presented. One of these claims will be against Richmond for gate money not collected on Labor Day. The rules of the league declare that women shall be charged admission on holidays.

The protesting clubs maintain that Richmond failed to collect fare on upwards of 500 of the fair sex who entered the park on that day, making a sum of money aggregating something like $300 which it is held Richmond owes the league.

Another problem which will be presented should Danville's franchise be transferred to Newport News, and whether the several owners are willing to take in the oyster and steamship city. Those who oppose Williams fail to realize that he has the bulge. Even the league is equally divided. Williams remains in the chair, for the reason that the constitution provides that the president shall hold over until his successor is elected.

On a divided vote Williams will win.

No Good Accomplished.
It is a sad muddle, and the meeting to-day has done baseball no good. Already skeptical, the good people who pay to see the games will become more skeptical. If possible, and certainly more chary of being separated from the home hits to see an article of baseball which is being delivered by a set of magnates at war with themselves.

The question of increasing the player and the salary limit was not discussed, though a committee, to be composed of three members not yet named by the league, will consider changes in the constitution and by-laws, presumably with the idea in mind of making the game more presentable from a playing standpoint. A committee on circuit, the duty of which is not clearly defined, was also created, despite the fact that the five-year agreement entered into last year names the cities which are to compose the circuit, unless one of the cities named in the pact should withdraw.

Charlie Babb's protests against the Petersburg club failed to materialize, and have been, presumably, shelved. Certain it is that small consideration will be accorded them should they arise at any future time.

The meeting is best epitomized by saying that everything done was negative. There was nothing accomplished, not even the good-timing which has heretofore marked the close of the season. There were no felicitations and no hands of good fellowship were extended. It was right from the moment the meeting began, and more fight is yet ahead. The best look good from the public's standpoint, and really it doesn't look good from any standpoint. The old story of the house divided against itself comes to the front, and unless there is something positive done, the result is going to be the same.

Of what might have been accomplished little need be said. The representatives of the league might have elected a president. They might have taken some action looking to a salary limit increase, and restored confidence in the ability of the Virginia League to furnish good baseball. But they did none of these things, and so conditions remain the same. It was a trying period, through which the Virginia League has just passed, and more trying than the one anticipated unless more regard is paid to the desires and demands of the paying public.

ACADEMY OPENS
Limit of Accommodations Nearly Reached First Day.

With 113 students on the roll—the largest number ever matriculated on this first day—the City Academy formally opened yesterday. Other applicants for entrance are expected in the next few days, but as the limit of the school is nearly reached, they are likely to be disappointed. The two new professors—H. L. Snead in the Latin department, and Clay L. Cole, in the English department—are already on the ground. All lessons will be assigned this morning and the work proper will begin to-morrow.

Football Coach O. M. Richardson began work along with the professors yesterday. After the exercises were concluded the students, body together, and made a stirring speech in behalf of athletics. A large number of the squad signed up and will be on the ground for the first practice this afternoon.

CHARTERS GRANTED
The Cloyton Church of revival continues to draw large crowds. So much good work is being done and such an interest is taken in these services that it was decided to continue another week. Each night as a special attraction a solo is rendered by some local singer. Last night Mrs. R. J. Shiffert sang, and Miss Ida Butler will sing tonight.

Miss Allen Walker of Woodland Heights, will at noon to-day become the bride of Lawrence W. Page in Washington, D. C. The announcement of the marriage comes as a surprise to the many friends of the young couple. Miss Walker is the young daughter of Mr. M. W. Walker, of 2715 Semmes Avenue, and Mr. Page is the son of Charles W. Page, the former attorney of the city of Maryland, and former Commonwealth's attorney of Chesterfield county. Until recently Mr. Page made his home with his father, who is now engaged in business in Philadelphia. He expects to locate after a two weeks' wedding trip to Northern cities.

Carriage Struck by Car.
F. L. Lewis and family of Church Hill, narrowly escaped being killed Sunday night when their carriage was struck by an electric car.

The carriage was completely overturned and the occupants thrown out. Mrs. Lewis is landed on the tender of the car and received several bad cuts and a sprained ankle. The most miraculous part of the accident was the escape of a seven-months-old baby which was thrown through the wheel of the carriage and landed just out of reach of the overturning buggy. Mr. Lewis and another child each received a few scratches.

Personal and General.
G. L. Nunnally, of Sixth and Hull Streets, is confined to his home with hay fever.

HASKER QUALIFIES

FIGHTS EXTRADITION
Youth Admitted to Jail—Other Cases in Police Court.

Francis Miller, sixteen years old, appeared in Police Court yesterday morning to answer to a charge of being a fugitive from justice from Philadelphia. He is said to be under probation in that city and Mrs. J. L. Pickering, probation officer of Philadelphia, arrived here Sunday to take the boy back with her. He has been charged with larceny. But he has decided to fight extradition, and the case was continued to October 3. He was bailed in the sum of $200, with P. M. Slaughter as his bondsman.

The case against Joseph Coles and James Brooks, colored, charged with having cocaine in their possession with intent to sell, was continued to September 25, and the case against Harris, alias William Loney, charged with the same offense, was continued to September 27.

White Wing, who was recorded on the docket as being white, but who claims to be an Indian, was fined $5.

ALDERMAN UP IN AIR
Melton Willing to Entertain Populace at State Fair.

Alderman W. Melton yesterday afternoon indicated his desire to take chances with the parachute while dropping several times a day during the State Fair. He is willing to go up the parachute, and feels confident that he can land with safety.

Alderman Melton has studied the art of aviation, and has practiced at Glades Springs. He has fallen from a tree on several occasions, and has always landed upon his feet, and that is the reason he thinks that he can land from a parachute.

He understands fully that it is dangerous landing from a tree than from a parachute, for in dropping from a tree he lands on terra firma with a thud, and in landing from a parachute he lands with a dull, sickening thud. But he doesn't mind that, for he has tried hanging on his head on a mossy bank without dropping in the brook, and he thinks that he can land from a parachute.

The case against Clarence Morris, charged with stealing a mule, wagon and harness from Richard Gwathmey & Co., was continued to September 29.
